(I) Alex lived in London. In November he said to his wife, Anne, “I’m going to fly to Boston next week because I’ve got some work there.”
“Where are you going to stay?” Anne asked.
“I don’t know yet,” Alex answered.
“Please send me your address from there in telegram (电报),” Anne said.
“All right,” Alex answered.
He flew to Boston on November 28th and found a nice hotel in the city. He put his things in his room and then he sent Anne a telegram. He put the address of his hotel in it.
In the evening, he did not have any work to do, so he went to a movie. He came out at nine o’clock and said, “Now I’m going to go back to my hotel and have a nice dinner.”
He found a taxi, and the driver said, “Where do you want to go?” But Alex did not remember the name or address of his hotel.
“Which hotel are my things in?” he asked the driver. “And what am I going to do tonight?” But the driver of the taxi did not know, so Alex got out and went to a telegraph office (电报局). He sent Anne another telegram, and in it he wrote, “Please send my address at the telegraph office.”
